Welcome to the Global Day of Jewish Learning.

The act of planting is at the core of gardening and farming, and serves as a universally understood metaphor for long-term planning and investment. In this session, we will look more closely at how planting holds a special significance in Jewish life, and find lessons in Jewish tradition that can apply to our lives today.

Read aloud this traditional Welsh proverb:

A seed hidden in the heart of an apple is an orchard invisible.

Ask:

1. What do you think this proverb means?
2. Think of a time in your life when this proverb could have applied to the situation. Describe that time.
3. The proverb lists three things: a seed; the heart of an apple; an orchard. Each of these is something unseen — hidden or invisible. What is the significance of this emphasis on the unseen?

As we study together today, keep in mind this proverb, seeds, and things that we cannot yet see.

Part One: The First Gardener (10 minutes)

After God separated the light from the darkness, made the heavens and earth, the sky and water, He created plants.

Read Text #1 aloud.

Text #1: Genesis 1:11–12.

11 And God said, “Let the earth sprout vegetation: seed-bearing plants, fruit trees of every kind on earth that bear fruit with the seed in it.” And it was so. 12 The earth brought forth vegetation: seed-bearing plants of every kind, and trees of every kind bearing fruit with the seed in it. And God saw that this was good.
God has the power to create huge and fundamental things fully formed — like the heavens and the earth — yet He creates plants as sprouts that must grow into their final form.

Bringing plants into existence is the first act of creating life, and that process incorporates the concept of the seed. By creating plants with seeds inside of them, God anticipates the essential place that planting is to hold in the perpetuation of life. Indeed, planting is a top priority within the Jewish tradition.

Part Two: Plant First and Foremost (15 minutes)

Text #2 is from Leviticus Rabbah, a compilation of midrash on Leviticus.

> Read Text #2 aloud.

Text #2: Leviticus Rabbah 25:3.

אף אתם כשאתם נכנסין לארץ ישראל לא תפרנסו אלא במטע תחילה, כי תבואו אל הארץ ונטעתם כל עץ מאכל.

Therefore, when you are in the Land of Israel, occupy yourselves first and foremost with planting. Hence it is written, “When you come into the land, you shall plant trees for food” (Leviticus 19:23).

> Ask:

1. Why do you think the first action the Children of Israel are to take when they enter the Land of Israel is to plant? What might be the significance of the commentary emphasizing that planting be done “first and foremost”?
2. What do you think people today — most of whom are not farmers — should do as the first action they take when arriving in a new home or town?

The Bible states that when the Children of Israel first arrive in the Land of Israel they are commanded to put down roots first, to plant the seeds of the crops they will need to eat in the next season. They start with planting seeds and, with time and patience, harvest the growth from those plants.

In addition to securing physical livelihood, planting is an investment in a new home. Planting requires that you be there to tend the crops — to garden means to invest the time to be in that place.

We make land ours by planting and tending it, as we turn a house into a home by investing time and effort.
Planting for the Future

Text #3 is from Midrash Avot Derabbi Natan, a commentary on Ethics of our Fathers (Pirkei Avot) compiled in 700–900 CE.

Read Text #3 aloud.

If you had a sapling in your hand and were told that the Messiah had come, first plant the sapling [and then go out to greet the Messiah].

Ask:

1. Jews have been praying for the Messiah for thousands of years, yet this text says planting a sapling is more important than greeting the Messiah. How would you explain this?
2. In this text a person is in the middle of planting — the sapling is in hand. What does this Midrash teach us about finishing tasks?
3. Plants were the first living things created by God. The arrival of the Messiah would signal the end of history. What is the significance of juxtaposing these two extremes together in one Midrash?

One might think that the coming of the Messiah would be a legitimate occasion to “drop everything”, or that arriving in the Promised Land would call for thankful prayer as the first act. However, as these texts make clear, Jewish tradition values planting as a practical necessity to such an extent that it becomes the prescribed act of devotion. The Children of Israel are commanded to plant. In doing so they are accepting the responsibilities of their new home. The obligation to plant is binding even at the arrival of the Messiah.

Now let’s explore the more practical elements behind those priorities, and how planting is part of a long-term obligation.

Part Three: Planting for the Future (15 minutes)

Ask participants to read Texts #4 and #5 in chavruta. Chavruta is partnered learning. Learning with a friend or two allows you to share ideas and insights with one another as you learn together.

Text #4 relates the story of Honi “The Circle Maker,” a Jewish scholar of the 1st century B.C.E.

One day, he was walking along the road when he saw a certain man planting a carob tree. Honi said to him: This tree, after how many years will it bear fruit? The man said to him: It will not produce fruit until seventy years have passed. Honi said to him: Is it obvious to you that you will live seventy years, that you expect to benefit from this tree? He said to him: That man himself found a world full of carob trees. Just as my ancestors planted for me, I too am planting for my descendants.
Text #5 describes a tradition of planting a tree when a child is born.

Text #5: Babylonian Talmud Gittin 57a. English translation [bold text] and commentary [plain text] by Rabbi Adin Even-Israel Steinsaltz in the Koren Talmud Bavli.

The Gemara explains that it was customary in Beitar that when a boy was born they would plant a cedar tree and when a girl was born they would plant a cypress tree and when they would later marry each other they would cut down these trees and construct a wedding canopy for them from their branches.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>In Chavruta, discuss:</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1. What common theme are both of these texts addressing? What is the main idea of each text?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2. Bring to mind the theme and main ideas you identified in the previous question. Considering that many of us today live in urban societies rather than agricultural ones — even in places where we don’t have our own gardens — how would you apply the same theme and main ideas to our modern lives?</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Bring the group together. Ask a few chavrutot to share their responses to the questions with the full group.

The old man with the carob tree knows he will not eat fruit from that particular tree, but he plants it anyway, for his children. In Beitar, the branches of cedar trees and cypress trees that were planted for children would be used to make wedding canopies for them. In this light, the act of planting becomes a metaphor signifying long-term planning and commitment.

Ask:

1. Judaism emphasizes that individuals should care about future generations. Why do you think this is, and what does it mean to you?

Conclusion (15 minutes)

Text #6 is by Rabbi Adin Even-Israel Steinsaltz. One of the leading scholars of this century, Rabbi Steinsaltz is best known for his commentary on the entire Talmud and for his work on Jewish mysticism.

Text #7 is from Midrash Tanchuma, a compilation of legal and narrative midrash on the Torah named for Rabbi Tanchuma, the first person mentioned in the collection.

Bring the group back together again. Ask one person from the group to read Texts #6 and #7 aloud.
Text #6: Rabbi Adin Even-Israel Steinsaltz. “Banishment from Eden”. In the Beginning.

God sent Adam forth from the Garden to till the soil from which he had been taken, work that requires sorting out, sowing, plowing, and harvesting. In order to be able to live from the earth, man has to keep digging, weeding and drawing forth from the ground. The point is that the work of weeding out the harmful and proliferating the good can be done only in and with the earth itself. The war of man against thorns and thistles, insects and rodents, is an incessant struggle, and it is part of his work of Tikun, correcting the world.

Text #7: Midrash Tanchuma, Parshat Kedoshim, Chapter 8.

Even if you find the land full of all good things, you should not say, “We will sit and not plant”; rather, be diligent in planting! As it says “you shall plant trees for food” (Leviticus 19:23). Just as you came and found trees planted by others, you must plant for your children; a person must not say, “I am old, how many years will I live? Why should I get up and exert myself for others? I'm going to die tomorrow.”

Ask:

1. In these texts, Rabbi Steinsaltz and Midrash Tanchuma mention cultivation of plants alongside individual responsibilities to others. What are those responsibilities?
2. Which points made by these texts do you particularly agree or disagree with? Why?

Think back to the proverb we read at the beginning: “A seed hidden in the heart of an apple is an orchard invisible.” We have learned how God chose to create plants as sprouts containing the seed for future generations within themselves. We found that planting is a cultural priority in the Jewish tradition and that planting is sacred. We’ve seen how planting is something we are obligated to do, both as a practical preparation for our needs and as an investment for the future. The seed — the source of so much potential — is hidden in the heart of an apple. That apple came from a tree planted by someone who lived before we did. Generation to generation, the potential for life and growth is passed down through the act of planting. In taking the time and effort to plant, tend and harvest, we allow ourselves to be “rooted” in what we do. We plant things for our children — to celebrate their birth and to provide for their futures. We understand that the “fruit” of our efforts may be something that we ourselves will not get to harvest.

Even when we think our gardens are full — that we find trees planted by others, or we have things provided for us so easily — we are still obligated to plant. Even when our own immediate needs are met, we must plan(t) for the needs of those who come after us. Planting is a way to give significance to our actions, and for our actions to make the world better.
Part One: The First Gardener

Text #1: Genesis 1:11–12.

11 And God said, “Let the earth sprout vegetation: seed-bearing plants, fruit trees of every kind on earth that bear fruit with the seed in it.” And it was so. 12 The earth brought forth vegetation: seed-bearing plants of every kind, and trees of every kind bearing fruit with the seed in it. And God saw that this was good.

Part Two: Plant First and Foremost

Text #2: Leviticus Rabbah 25:3.

Therefore, when you are in the Land of Israel, occupy yourselves first and foremost with planting. Hence it is written, “When you come into the land, you shall plant trees for food” (Leviticus 19:23).

If you had a sapling in your hand and were told that the Messiah had come, first plant the sapling [and then go out to greet the Messiah].

Part Three: Planting for the Future

One day, he was walking along the road when he saw a certain man planting a carob tree. Honi said to him: This tree, after how many years will it bear fruit? The man said to him: It will not produce fruit until seventy years have passed. Honi said to him: Is it obvious to you that you will live seventy years, that you expect to benefit from this tree? He said to him: That man himself found a world full of carob trees. Just as my ancestors planted for me, I too am planting for my descendants.
Text #5: Babylonian Talmud Gittin 57a. English translation [bold text] and commentary [plain text] by Rabbi Adin Even-Israel Steinsaltz in the Koren Talmud Bavli.

The Gemara explains that it was customary in Beitar that when a boy was born they would plant a cedar tree and when a girl was born they would plant a cypress [tornita]. And when they later married each other they would cut down these trees and construct a wedding canopy for them from their branches.

Conclusion

Text #6: Rabbi Adin Even-Israel Steinsaltz. “Banishment from Eden”, from In the Beginning.

God sent Adam forth from the Garden to till the soil from which he had been taken, work that requires sorting out, sowing, plowing, and harvesting. In order to be able to live from the earth, man has to keep digging, weeding and drawing forth from the ground. The point is that the work of weeding out the harmful and proliferating the good can be done only in and with the earth itself. The war of man against thorns and thistles, insects and rodents, is an incessant struggle, and it is part of his work of Tikun, correcting the world.

Text #7: Midrash Tanchuma, Parshat Kedoshim, Chapter 8.

Even if you find the land full of all good things, you should not say, “We will sit and not plant”; rather, be diligent in planting! As it says “you shall plant trees for food” (Leviticus 19:23). Just as you came and found trees planted by others, you must plant for your children; a person must not say, “I am old, how many years will I live? Why should I get up and exert myself for others? I’m going to die tomorrow.”